A First Look at TEFAF New York 2026

APRIL 14, 2026 · NEW YORK, NY

The European Fine Art Foundation (TEFAF) is pleased to share a “First Look” at select works that will be showcased at TEFAF New York 2026. These pieces offer a preview of the exceptional breadth and caliber of works that will fill the Park Avenue Armory from May 15–19, 2026 (May 14 invitation-only Collectors’ Preview).

This year, 88 of the world’s finest dealers and galleries, representing 15 countries across four continents, will present museum-quality works spanning Modern and Contemporary Art, Jewelry, Antiquities, and Design.

In addition to curated displays in the Armory’s Drill Hall, TEFAF New York will feature exclusive presentations within the venue’s 16 historic period rooms, where the stories of the artworks are set in dialogue with 20th-century New York City architecture.

For additional information regarding TEFAF New York, please visit www.TEFAF.com

The 22 works included in this First Look have not yet undergone formal vetting at TEFAF New York, this will occur onsite at the fair. The organization assumes no responsibility for inaccuracies, misrepresentations, or omissions in the information provided about these art objects.

Shahzia Sikander

The Hour Glass

2025

Glass mosaic with patinated brass frame

83,9 × 60,6 × 2 inches (213 × 154 × 5 cm)

Shahzia Sikander is one of the foremost artists of her generation who has been recognized for her ability to animate South Asian visual histories through a contemporary perspective. In The Hour Glass, the artist returns to a motif she conceived in the early 90s while a student at the Rhode Island School of Design.

These floating figures appear with root-like forms instead of arms and legs and embody what Sikander calls “Migrant Love.” Rendered in mosaic, these figures hold multiple meanings, often affirming how women, deeply rooted in their identities and cultural heritage, cannot be easily uprooted or silenced. The lotus, another recurring motif in Sikander’s work, is also evident as a form that can signify humility, spiritual awakening, and love across many cultures.

Andy Warhol

Mao

1973

Silkscreen ink and synthetic polymer paint on canvas

12 × 10 inches (30.5 × 25.4 cm)

Warhol's Mao (1973) is historically significant for transforming a political dictator into a pop icon, mirroring the mass-production of consumer goods like Campbell's Soup.

Created after Nixon's 1972 visit to China, this work captures a pivotal geopolitical shift by subverting official state propaganda with expressive colors. Ultimately, it challenges the boundary between political authority and commercial celebrity in a media-saturated world.

Alberto Giacometti

Pair of sculptures

1944

Plaster

33.9 × 13.8 × 13.8 inches (86 × 35 × 35 cm)

This exceptional pair of plaster vases was created by Alberto Giacometti for Albert Skira in 1944, when he was staying in Geneva during World War II. Alberto Giacometti created few pieces and mainly small sculptures, drawings, texts during this period in Geneva. These examples are an exception as they are among the larger pieces of art created by Giacometti during his Geneva stay, sculpted by the artist directly on the plaster. These works bear the Alberto Giacometti Committee numbers AG01 and AG02 on their bases and are listed in the Alberto and Annette Giacometti Foundation database under numbers 4734 and 4735. They remained in the family of Albert Skira until now.

PRESENTED BY FORMS (STAND 102)

FORMS

Diamond, Shakudo and Bronze Fan Brooch

2026

Diamond, Shakudo, Bronze, Gold

2 × 2.4 inches (5 × 6 cm)

This diamond brooch is crafted in a bold fan design, enhanced with shakudo and bronze accents. The sandblasted white gold fan part adds contrast and texture to the design. Mounted in 18 karat white gold, it features FORMS' signature innovative fluid channel setting, which reduces metal use to achieve a sleek, dynamic effect.

FORMS is a high jewelry house offering a curated selection of unique pieces that combine modern design and masterful craftsmanship. With a focus on creative freedom, rarity, artistry, and innovation, each limited collection is meticulously designed and produced in-house by an international team of skilled designers and master artisans under the creative direction of Tzvika Janover.

Finn Juhl

The Chieftain Chair

1949

Teak and original leather

37 × 41 × 29.1 inches (94 × 104 × 74 cm)

The Chieftain Chair is one of Finn Juhl's absolute masterpieces, representing the peak of his career as a furniture designer. At its introduction in 1949, the chair marked a renewal of the Danish furniture design tradition and today it is seen as one of the most important exponents of the Danish Modern movement in the 1950s. Inspired by modern art, The Chieftain Chair, with its organic shapes, liberated itself from traditional Danish furniture design and strict functionalism in its shape, construction, and materials. The Chieftain Chair won the Danish Design Award Classic in 2012.

Willem De Kooning

Woman on a Sign IV

1967

Oil on paper mounted on canvas

24 × 18.3 inches (61 × 46.5 cm)

In 1963, after establishing himself as one of the leading innovators of the postwar New York Abstract Expressionist movement, Willem de Kooning left the city for East Hampton on Long Island. Surrounded by the region's quiet and natural beauty, he found renewed inspiration in his enduring theme of the female figure intertwined with landscape.

Unlike the confrontational, almost ferocious women of the previous decade, his paintings of the 1960s reveal a notable shift in tone and technique. In Woman on a Sign IV (1967), de Kooning adopts fluid brushwork, luminous color, and a sunlit atmosphere. Here, animated hues, loosely abstracted forms, and sweeping, liquid paint handling combine with suggestive poses to reenergize the primal vitality of his iconic Women series.

Martin Kippenberger

Ohne Titel (Händchen)

1996

Mixed media

19.7 × 23.6 × 17.7 inches (50 × 60 × 45 cm)

Martin Kippenberger work is marked by irony, dark humor, and a raw, often chaotic energy. Kippenberger freely appropriated styles—from abstraction to cartoonish figuration—treating painting less as a vehicle of purity and more as a site of cultural commentary.

Ohne Titel is suspended between the wonder of childhood and suspicion. The scene hovers on the fine line between magic and deception as the illuminated space evokes memories of vaudeville, belief in the supernatural, and a readiness to be amazed – and possibly fooled. The hand is autobiographical and self-referential, pointing back to Martin Kippenberger as Spider-Man in his large-scale 1996 installation, Spiderman Studio.

Hemmerle Munich

Hemmerle earrings

2026

Umba Sapphires, burnt copper, white gold

2.2 x 1.4 inches (56 x 37 mm)

These earrings center on Japanese, late Meiji period flower ceramics (1868–1912), delicately painted with wisteria and irises, each bearing the master’s mark (ta mi) in ink on the reverse. The miniature compositions reflect a refined Japanese aesthetic, where botanical motifs are rendered with both precision and lyrical softness, capturing a fleeting moment in nature.

Framed in burnt copper and white gold, the historic elements are recontextualized through Hemmerle’s contemporary approach, allowing past and present to coexist within a single composition. Above, a sculptural dome of over 160 Umba sapphires, totalling 22.66 carats, introduces depth and intensity, their warm, shifting hues echoing the tonal palette of the painted scenes below.

Cecily Brown

Functor Hideaway

2008

Oil on canvas

77 × 55 inches (195.6 × 139.7 cm)

Functor Hideaway (2008) exemplifies Cecily Brown's celebrated fusion of gestural abstraction with suggestive figuration. In this work, she emphasizes ambiguity rather than clear storytelling, using vigorous sweeps of color to shape forms that hint at the human body without fully resolving into it.

Mesmerizing and immersive, Brown's choreography of painterly gestures in Functor Hideaway engulfs the viewer into a phantasmagorical realm, akin to a woodland pathway through the frenzied woods. Here, we see Brown break free from traditional narrative conventions as she blends centuries of artistic styles and techniques, putting forth a distinctive artistic voice that has emerged as the natural successor in the lineage of Western art history.

Jean Dubuffet

Le Commodore

1971

Acrylic on klegecell

72 × 39 inches (183 × 99 cm)

Jean Dubuffet was a French painter, sculptor, draughtsman, and printmaker, renowned not only for his work but also as the “inventor” of a form of art he named “Art Brut.” Le Commodore is an important example his late-career turn to monumental sculpture.

Le Commodore is one of many pieces from the artist’s L’Hourloupe Cycle, created between the early 1960s and 1974, during which Dubuffet revisited and reworked the figures that had shaped his earlier art. The piece echoes his paintings and drawings from the 1940s and 50s, whose simplicity conveys his rejection of academic art and conventional artistic traditions. Although his work initially faced strong criticism, it gradually came to be recognized as one of the most significant bodies of work of the 20th century.

Ludovic Nkoth

System Black V

2024

Acrylic on canvas

70 × 62 inches (177.8 × 157.5 cm)

Ludovic Nkoth's artistic creations capture the essence of the Black experience with an unparalleled emotional depth that resonates with the diasporic life and the rich history of his heritage. Nkoth's practice is characterized by a distinctively swirling brush, his use of a layered, vivid palette, and his iconography of figures drawn from both fantasy and memory. Each canvas starts with a wash of pigment that flows in swaths of vivid color, over which Nkoth defines the subject's posture and features, allowing the initial sprawl to shine through as an inner iridescence.

In System Black V, the grids touch on so many different levels, not only art history but also the human condition. The grid can be seen as the system that many people of color, and many in the United States, wrestle with on a daily basis.

Camilla Moberg

Green Treasure II

2025

Handblown glass, aluminium, steel, acrylic, silicone, LED

74.4 × 14 × 14 inches (189 × 35.5 × 35.5 cm)

Handcrafted in blown glass in Nuutajärvi, Finland's oldest glassmaking village, the luminescent glass sculpture Green Treasure II draws inspiration from the iridescent colors and patterns of insects and birds, celebrating their beauty while reflecting on the fragility of biodiversity. Placing stones in formation is an old means of communication, used to greet, warn, advise, guide, and to deliver an important message.

Its luminous, stacked forms evoke a totem-like balance, symbolizing the delicate equilibrium between nature's resilience and its urgent need for preservation. The message advises us not to forget the small ones, the ones we don't see but who often are the most important.

Minjung Kim

Story

2026

Mixed media on mulberry Hanji paper

51.4 × 66.9 inches (130.5 x 170 cm)

Minjung Kim is a contemporary Korean artist whose work explores space, perception, and key artistic dichotomies such as matter/void, presence/absence, and order/chance.

Kim cites Lucio Fontana as a major Western influence, alongside artists like Alberto Burri and Franz Kline. Her practice blends these Western references with her deep training in traditional Eastern techniques, particularly brush and ink painting. She is known for her distinctive process of cutting, burning, and layering mulberry Hanji paper.

Pierre Soulages

Pierre Peinture 162 x 114 cm, 29 août 1958
1958

Oil on canvas

63.8 × 44.9 inches (162 × 114 cm)

Pierre Peinture 162 x 114 cm, 29 août 1958 is a dramatic, large-scale oil painting by Pierre Soulages. It has been held in the same private collection for sixty years since its creation. Soulages first made unified linear compositions in the late 1940s, and by 1958, he was creating complex, translucent color in his works through scraping away layers of impasto, modulating his paint's lustre and texture to create a dazzling array of effects.

The present work is a magnificent example of this approach. Broad, interlocking bars of gleaming black are dragged vertically and horizontally against a shimmering field of dark grey, which itself has been pulled like a curtain over a ground of pale gold. The weighty lattice of glossy black beams creates an imposing yet delicately balanced form, reminiscent of a character of Japanese script. Its swathes of dark, lacquer-like pigment are offset by areas dragged into lyrical translucency.

Helmeted Athena

Roman, 1st-2nd century AD

Marble

30.3 × 8.5 × 11.4 inches (77 × 21.5 × 29 cm)

Dating from the 1st–2nd century AD, this impressive marble head represents the goddess Athena, known in the Greek and Roman pantheon as the goddess of wisdom, strategy, and warfare. Athena is immediately identifiable by her Corinthian helmet, pushed back atop her head, an attribute that emphasizes both her martial nature and her role as a divine protector.

The sculpture also bears traces of its later history. Restorations from the 18th century, including parts of the helmet, bust, and base, reflect the long-standing European fascination with antiquity and the practice of restoring ancient works for display. Despite these interventions, the piece retains a strong visual and symbolic presence. Overall, this work exemplifies the Roman reinterpretation of Greek artistic ideals, combining classical harmony with technical virtuosity.

Ithell Colquhoun

The Sunset Birth

c. 1942

Oil on canvas

Unframed: 15.5 x 29 inches (9.3 x 71.2 cm)

Framed: 22.5 x 35 inches (57.3 x 89 cm)

Ithell Colquhoun first began visiting Cornwall during WWII and settled there in the late 1940s. She developed a profound connection to the region's landscape and mythology. This is particularly evident in Sunset Birth, where she draws on the forms of Mên-an-Tol—a group of standing stones long associated with healing and fertility rituals.

According to local legend, infants could be cured by being passed through the holed stone “against the sun,” symbolizing rebirth, while crawling through it was believed to remedy infertility. The final composition reveals the dissolved form of a woman, leaving only an ethereal trace. This presence persists in the glowing stones and flowing currents, where folklore, spirituality, and the vital energies of the natural landscape converge.

Conceived for the Bittencourt House, the tea trolley forms part of the body of furniture developed by Lina Bo Bardi (Italy, 1914 – Brazil, 1992) within the context of the Studio d'Arte Palma a key initiative in the formulation of a modern language in Brazil grounded in local materials and vernacular knowledge—the tea trolley (c. 1950) is among the few surviving objects from the studio's brief existence (1948–1950).

Originally designed in pau-marfim wood, the model was ultimately executed in plywood, underscoring the architect's recurrent adaptation of means and her attentiveness to the concrete conditions of production. Associated with practices of conviviality and hospitality, the tea trolley introduces a dynamic dimension into the domestic interior, mediating relations between circulation, service, and sociability.

Stele for Thutmose IV

C. 1417-1407 B.C., Reign of Thutmose IV, 18th Dynasty, New Kingdom, Egypt
Limestone

27.2 x 18.1 inches (69 x 46 cm)

The Limestone Stele for Thutmose IV is a magnificent and large 3,300-year-old stele dating to the reign of Pharaoh Thutmose IV (c. 1401–1391 BC), once owned by the co-founder of modern professional bodybuilding, Ben Weider (1923–2008). The stele was presented to Weider in Cairo in 1964 by the United Arab Republic of Bodybuilding Federation in recognition of his work in popularizing bodybuilding in the Middle East.

The stele depicts the pharaoh on the left-hand side, wearing the double crown of Upper and Lower Egypt, or pschent. In his right hand he holds an ankh and in the other the was sceptre. An offering bearer stands before the king on the right, with both arms extended bearing offerings of plants. Above the figures is a row of incised hieroglyphs, including two cartouches recording the name and prenomen of the pharaoh. A winged sun disc sits at the top of the composition, with wings outstretched over the scene.

Barbara Hepworth

Idol

1955–56 / cast 1971

Bronze

28.5 x 1.9 x 1.9 inches (72.4 x 5 x 5 cm)

Idol is a polished bronze version of an eponymous boxwood carving that Hepworth made in 1955–56 and cast in 1971. The title of Idol implies that the sculpture is a ritualistic place-holder for some divine being. Certain dominant types of sculptural form recurred throughout Hepworth's creative lifetime, and she proactively conceived and made work that satisfied certain typologies: the standing form; the closed form; the two forms.

Idol is an example of the standing form, which Hepworth frequently associated with the presence of a human figure in landscape. The elongated upright form of Idol is animated by three small, eye-like apertures at the top. The form tapers at the waist and has an egg-shaped indentation. Hepworth explained in 1946, "this relationship between figure and landscape is vitally important to me."

John Chamberlain

Tonk #2-86

1986

Painted and chromium-plated steel

11 × 10 × 5 inches (27.9 × 25.4 × 12.7 cm)

John Chamberlain is considered one of the most important American Post-War sculptors, known for his intuitive compilations of interlocking metals and use of industrial media. His distinctive metal sculptures, often made of crushed automobile steel, reveal both the elegant beauty and the expressive plasticity of industrial materials.

Exploring the interplay of color, weight, and balance, Chamberlain tapped into the energy of Abstract Expressionism and transformed it into three dimensions. Ranging in scale from miniature to monumental, Chamberlain's compositions established him as one of the first American artists to determine color as a natural component of abstract sculpture.

Line Vautrin

"Folie" or "Le Soleil a rendez-vous avec la Lune"

1960

Talose and glass

23.6 × 31.9 inches (60 × 81 cm)

This large “Folie” mirror, also known as “Le Soleil a Rendez-Vous avec la Lune,” is a singular model in Line Vautrin’s work. Entirely black, with a very raw material, it is reminiscent of the surface of the moon or a meteorite. One of the rare decorative motifs, that of strie, may also bring to mind the patterns adorning certain African masks in dark wood. Le Soleil a Rendez-Vous avec la Lune is part of these rare mirrors created as sculptures by Line Vautrin. It’s poetic juxtaposition in the meeting between the sun and the moon, this model is strong and vibrating by the use of black patinated talose, without any inlay of colored mirrors.

SEIZŌ SUGAWARA

The Ardent Armchair

c. 1915

Lacquered wood, solid wood, silver powder

36.6 × 28.7 × 24.4 inches (93 × 73 × 62 cm)

Trained at the École des Beaux-Arts in Tokyo, Sugawara arrived in Paris in 1905 to teach the art of lacquer to jeweller Lucien Gaillard, becoming one of a small number of Japanese expatriates working in France. He later collaborated with and worked for the legendary designer Eileen Gray.

This rare armchair draws inspiration from traditional Chinese root chairs, such as the example held in the collections of the Asian Arts Museum in Nice, France. It uses a traditional and ancient Japanese lacquer technique called maki-e with silver powder, and the original horsehair cushion has been preserved. It is one of the most singular surviving objects from the early-20th-century Japonisme movement.
