TEFAF's first grant of 2022 will conserve the Montefiore Mainz Mahzor – a cultural, religious, and research object that is more than 700 years old

New York, NY (March 3, 2022) – The European Fine Art Foundation (TEFAF) is pleased to announce that The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston (MFAH) is a recipient of the TEFAF Museum Restoration Fund, a grant program created in support of the international art community's vital work to preserve artistic and cultural heritage.

The MFAH is the largest cultural institution in the southwest region of the United States with an encyclopedic collection of nearly 70,000 objects dating from antiquity to the present. With TEFAF's funding, the MFAH will conserve, using culturally appropriate methods, the Montefiore Mainz Mahzor (circa 1310–20), a festival prayer book and one of the rare Hebrew "illuminated manuscripts"—hand-written books with painted decorations—still in existence.

"This extraordinary manuscript is one of a very few surviving examples from Medieval Germany, and is all the more remarkable because it was actively used by congregants for centuries. When we acquired the Mahzor in 2018, it was the first piece of Judaica to enter the Museum's collection, and has prompted the endowment of a new gallery for Judaica. This generous grant from TEFAF will allow our team of conservators in Houston to restore and preserve this exceptional touchstone of Jewish heritage, so that we may display the book in our galleries as part of the Museum's World Faiths Initiative," said Gary Tinterow, Director of the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston.

Hidde van Seggelen, Chairman of TEFAF commented, "Supporting the wider art community is, and always has been, an integral part of TEFAF's mission. The TEFAF Museum Restoration Fund is one way that the foundation demonstrates its ongoing dedication to cultural heritage. We are delighted and honoured to be working with the MFAH on such a wonderful project this year. We are immensely proud to present this particular work—the unique European cross-cultural exchange an object like this affords in modern times is extraordinary."

"This represents the first time the fund has received an application for a work of Judaica and a manuscript, both categories represented at TEFAF, here married into one object. We are delighted to broaden the scope of our conservation projects in keeping with the diverse interests of the fair's international audience and exhibiting dealers," said Rachel Kaminsky, an art expert on the TEFAF Museum Restoration Fund committee.

The book will be on view at TEFAF New York from May 6 through 10, 2022. MFAH conservation efforts will begin later this year.

Celebrating its 10th anniversary this year, the TEFAF Museum Restoration Fund supports the restoration and conservation of culturally significant works in museums and institutions worldwide. Museums and institutions that have attended TEFAF Maastricht or TEFAF New York are eligible to apply for the grants, which are awarded by an independent committee of experts.

TEFAF will award a second grant to another museum institution leading up to TEFAF Maastricht, which runs June 25–30, 2022.

The Montefiore Mainz Mahzor

During Medieval times, the Jewish communities of the cities of Mainz, Speyer, and Worms became centers of Jewish life in the Rhineland. Charlemagne and his successors invited Jews to settle in the Rhine Valley and they flourished in the ninth and tenth centuries. After suffering at the hands of Crusaders in 1096, they rebuilt their communities in trading towns along the Main and Rhine, commissioning luxurious illustrated manuscripts such as the Mainz Mahzor a century later.

These books belonged to the entire congregation, and were publicly displayed and paged through. Measuring 16 by 11 inches, this codex has 299 leaves, each ruled in ink, pricked and written in black and red ink in Ashkenazic script. It was illuminated with hybrid animals, grotesques, and human figures. Its worn pages, some long ago incised or cut away, are palimpsests of generations of congregants. The Mahzor has been on view in the Judaica galleries of the MFAH since it was acquired in 2018.

The MFAH Restoration Process

The conservation treatment will take place at the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation Center for Conservation at the MFAH in the fall of 2022. The grant from the TEFAF Museum Restoration Fund will allow MFAH conservators to undertake an in-depth study of ethical and culturally appropriate conservation treatment for this illuminated manuscript, which has deep significance to the Jewish community. Stakeholders throughout the community will be consulted, and the project will include the input of Dr. Diane Wolfthal, an art historian at Rice University who is currently researching the manuscript, along with colleagues throughout the museum and the conservation field.

The MFAH conservation team has sampled and analyzed the Mahzor's parchment by eZooMS (Electrostatic Zooarchaeology by Mass Spectrometry) and determined it to be calf in origin. Many illuminations have been lost due to Christian censorship, and some leaves have been incised or cut out over the centuries by former owners, collectors, or dealers.

Generally, the treatment will include consolidation of leather on the cover of the Mahzor, which has lifted over time. Losses and tears of the parchment throughout the book will be mended and stabilized. The parchment used in the Mahzor comes from skin from a kosher animal and the text and illuminations would have been produced under the same strict guidelines ("halakha"). Conservation of illuminated manuscripts often requires consolidation—a process that refers to strengthening the bond between pigment and parchment, typically with non-Kosher gelatin. In the Jewish tradition, a scribe ("sofer") is usually enlisted to restore sacred texts. Before undertaking conservation of the Mahzor, the museum's conservators will determine culturally appropriate methods and materials of treatment after extensive discussion with stakeholders, researchers, and colleagues in order to preserve the essential values of the Mainz Mahzor as a cultural, religious, and research object—and a work of great beauty.
